One of our members recently enquired about security of photographs on websites, so here are some thoughts -

Security of photographs posted on a website is always at risk. They can be "stolen", some more easily than others. When it comes to the RPS website, there is a copyright notice at the foot of each page and most of the images on the site are of low resolution.

Copyright for any photograph which you have taken is automatically created when the image is made (although not necessarily added to the metadata) - it doesn't need to be claimed or registered ...

This is a brief extract from an article on the RPS Website which gives guidance on how to protect your work.

The trip was organised in response to many of the group's members who expressed an interest in trips closer to home. However, volunteers are needed to lead these meets by providing some local insight into places of (photogenic) interest, so please let us know if you can help.
